iCranleigh provides new online community hub

Date: 14th February 2012

Informed Choice, the award-winning firm of Chartered Financial Planners in Surrey, has launched a new community website and forum called iCranleigh (www.icranleigh.org.uk).

The website is designed to create an online community hub for the village, which is the largest in England with around 11,000 residents. It is free to use and includes a directory of local businesses, events listings and a user forum.

Informed Choice managing director Martin Bamford, who built the iCranleigh website commented:

"We have been working in Cranleigh for 18 years and wanted to create a website with real value for the local community. The initial feedback we have had from visitors has been fantastic, and we look forward to developing the site further over the coming months.

"iCranleigh was a concept we came up with a couple of months ago as we couldn't find any online forums serving the village. Several local businesses and organisations have already offered to write blogs for the website and its launch is creating a good buzz on Twitter (@icranleigh)."

All local businesses and groups are invited to add their details to the directory on iCranleigh, and suggest any local events for the events listing.
